Taking Charge of Your Health

Any time you tighten a muscle repeatedly, as when running or hammering, or hold it in one position for a long time, as when squatting or working at a computer, it may become stiff. Often stiffness and pain aren't felt until the next day. The tensor fasciae latae muscle, which runs along the outside of the upper leg and allows the leg to move outward to the side, is a common site for muscle tightness. But other muscles, including those in the buttocks and in the inside, front and back of the thigh, can also become tight.

Self-Care Tips

- Sit in a warm bath.
- Try some gentle stretching.
- Drinking plenty of water is also a good way to loosen up tight muscles.

If you have additional questions about muscle tightness, you can also contact your doctor or Columbus Regional Hospital's Ask-A-Nurse at 379-1210 or 1-800-365-0202.
